

Beyond the Dreamtime Long ago, perhaps as much as sixty thousand years, the vast island continent, combining Australia, New Guinea and Tasmania known then as Sahul was completely empty of human kind. It teemed with all manner of wild and exotic creatures, yet no footprint of Man was mixed amongst theirs. Sahul was a Garden of Eden awaiting occupation. It came, perhaps by sheer accident, and perhaps multiple times until there were enough humans to establish and sustain colonies that would eventually spread and adapt to the land, its megafauna and climate. This is a tale of one such migration and of the few who followed a charismatic leader, and events that threatened them every step of the way on land and across vast stretches of water.
