

Excerpt from Personal Reminiscences of Thirty-Five Years of Journalism The first editor, printing-office, and other attachments of a newspaper which I ever saw were in Schenectady, New York, in 1854. They were all a revelation as stunning, as novel as the first view of Niagara Falls to an appreciative stranger, or the art galleries of the Louvre to an enthusiastic visitor. The newspaper was the Evening Star, then lately started in that ancient city, and was the initial daily pioneer. It was located on the second floor of a building between the canal and the railway, on State Street. An ardent curiosity possessed me to inspect the mysteries of a newspaper. Born far up in the hill region, I knew but little of the civilization of cities, and had come to the town to take a course in its college, with the hayseed still in my hair and with the aroma of the barnyard scarcely removed from my boots.
