

This is a collection of 106 humorous short stories, essays, and poems, none longer than two (typewritten) pages. Such very short stories should appeal to many modern day readers whose time is often quite limited: there is a satisfaction to be enjoyed by the reader from completing a work in its entirety, and then being able to quickly return to listening to his/her ipod, texting while driving, etc. Virtually all of the stories are based on real life experiences; so, while fictional, ie, embellished and transformed for literary purposes, they have a certain grittiness beyond their comedic value that many readers would find intriguing and satisfying. The stories span a time period of almost fifty years and take place in various regions of this country; many readers certainly would be able to recognize similar characters and experiences from their own lives, as the stories draw from the common well of American culture, from the baby boomers time to the present day.
