

This directory of researchers in hyphenated techniques not only contains the names and addresses of most leading scientists in this rapidly developing field, it also specifies their main interests in developing and/or applying the technique. Additionally, the papers in this area that each listed scientist considers as his or her most significant contribution are given. A geographical index with techniques and application areas shows who is doing what in each country. Instrument manufacturers and suppliers are given on a country-by-country basis, along with the products or services they offer. A subject index is also included which lists scientists alphabetically according to their individual specialities. The editor has endeavoured to collect together, in this one source, information on whos who and the major research trends in the field of hyphenated techniques. This directory forms an integral part of the 1994 subscription to the Library Edition of Trends in Analytical Chemistry (TrAC) and is also available as a separate publication in paperback.
