

An increasing number of international trade disputes are settled through the WTO dispute settlement (DS) procedure. In parallel, an increasing number of international investment disputes are settled through investor-host state arbitration procedure. What does transparency mean in the context of international trade and investment dispute settlement? Why is enhanced transparency demanded? To what extent and in what manner should these dispute settlement procedures be transparent? The book addresses these issues of securing transparency in international trade and investment dispute settlement. Transparency in international trade and investment dispute settlement drew attention of international economic law scholars in the late 1990s, but most literature discusses the transparency in trade DS and investment DS separately. The book deals with the issue in a comprehensive and coherent manner, combining the analyses of the issue in both DS procedures and comparing the pros and cons to enhanced transparency in them. The main argument of the book is, firstly, that transparency in these procedures should be enhanced so that they may be accountable to a wider range of stakeholders, but, secondly, that the extent and the manner of transparency might differ in these two procedures, reflecting their structural and functional differences. The book appeals to both scholars and students interested in international economic law and international relations, as well as lawyers and government officials who deal with international trade and investment regulation.

The trend to enhance the transparency of investor-state dispute settlement is slowly spreading beyond NAFTA parties, with countries around the world adding into their more recent investment treaties specific provisions enabling the public to have access to information submitted in, generated in connection with, or. The article explores the purpose and development of transparency in international trade dispute settlement. Focusing on the WTO and CETA, it displays recent. A common form of dispute settlement in investment treaties is investor-state its Arbitration Rules, and the rules of the UN Commission on International Trade Law Australia, an UNCITRAL arbitration that was not subject to the Transparency.
